Policemen, Police Officers and State Troopers protect lives and property. They patrol their jurisdictions and investigate any suspicious activity they notice.

Policemen or Police Officers also referred to as Law Enforcement include State or Federal special agents or inspectors. They apprehend individuals who break the law and then issue citations, give warnings or arrest them taking them into custody. Policemen or Police Officers also write reports and maintain records of incidents they encounter. Policemen and Police Officers are expected to exercise authority when necessary, whether on or off duty.

State Troopers are also known as Highway Patrol Officers. They patrol highways to enforce motor vehicle laws and regulations. State Troopers often issue traffic citations to motorists and arrest criminals statewide. At the scene of accidents, State Troopers may direct traffic, give first aid, and call for emergency equipment. State Troopers also write reports used to determine the cause of the accident. State Troopers are frequently called upon to render assistance to other law enforcement agencies, especially those in rural areas or small towns.
